

Troisième concours du Capes et troisième Cafep-Capes

Section langues vivantes étrangères : anglais

Exemple de sujet pour l'épreuve écrite disciplinaire

À compter de la session 2022, les épreuves du concours externe du Capes et du Cafep-Capes sont modifiées. L'arrêté du 25 janvier 2021, publié au journal officiel du 29 janvier 2021, fixe les modalités d'organisation du concours et décrit le nouveau schéma des épreuves.

1^{ère} partie - Composition en langue étrangère

Write a commentary on the two documents. Taking into account their specificities, analyse the impact and the effects CCTV surveillance systems could have in French schools and classrooms.

Document 1

5

10

15

20

25

30

Should schools put CCTV cameras in classrooms?

Increasingly there has been concern from all education stakeholders over the safety of all individuals in schools. Allegations of staff have been targeted with violence and bullying by children and parents and colleagues; and allegations of children being targeted with violence and bullying by staff as well as other children. We as a society need to find a solution to change this drift and put safety at the forefront.

When CCTV cameras were introduced to a High School in Sydney, there was a noted 70% drop in bullying. Teachers in a Primary school were immediately suspended when recordings of their bullying and assault on young children were released to the media. Despite the many concerns over video technology in schools, this is a potential tool that needs to be looked at through the prism of health and safety, as well as potential pedagogical benefits.

The issues with CCTV

Privacy will always be of prime concern when any recording of children and/or employees is suggested. Schools currently keep confidential the most private information of families and staff from health records to court orders. Schools can and should be trusted to keep CCTV footage secure. CCTV is already in place in many schools in playgrounds and reception areas. It is estimated 85% of UK schools have CCTV in use. The larger question is whether CCTV is appropriate in the classroom. With 20-30 children in an average classroom, along with at least one staff member, it is hard to defend the argument that classrooms are private places, especially given the significant public funding involved. CCTV could deter potential assaults by staff or children. It also gives evidence against false allegations. Indeed, it could be used to support teachers in managing behaviour, gaining support from parents and improving pedagogical practice.

The Need for CCTV

Bodies such as the New South Wales Department of Education Employment Performance and Conduct are under review, in part because of the challenge of an internal body attempting to impartially investigate allegations. Employment places where there are children will always be a target for those who wish to mistreat the more vulnerable [...]. Children with a disability are three times more likely to be abused, non-verbal children ten times more likely. CCTV and mobile camera footage have been instrumental as evidence tools to prosecute and remove those minority adults who tarnish the whole teaching profession. The very same technology has been used to vindicate those staff members falsely accused. What we now need is research studies to evaluate its potential to support education and schools.

Wherever we go in society, we are filmed by CCTV. Cameras are outside houses, for traffic management, street protection, in most shops, even at every ATM machine. Whether we like it or not, cameras are already in the classroom with every BYOD¹ a child uses.

Perhaps it is time schools took control over the use of CCTV in the classroom, to ensure it is ethical, safe and protects everyone.

¹ BYOD is an abbreviation for 'bring your own device'.

35

David Roy is a lecturer in Education at the University of Newcastle (Australia)

Document 2

Still from 1984, film by Michael Anderson, Holiday Film Productions,1956 (The original document is in colour)

2ème partie - Traduction

Les candidats traduiront les deux textes ci-dessous.

Thème

Après avoir perdu plusieurs heures avec des clients indécis, Wim rentra place d'Arezzo en flânant. Il n'était guère pressé de rejoindre Petra Von Tannenbaum, qui s'avérait d'une compagnie plutôt ennuyeuse en dehors des réunions publiques. Elle employait ses journées à s'occuper d'elle, de son corps, en pratiquant de la gymnastique, de son régime, en mangeant des graines, de sa peau, en multipliant les soins et les crèmes, de ses vêtements, en martyrisant la couturière de théâtre ; s'il lui restait un peu de temps, elle découpait des photos et des articles dans les journaux avant de les coller sur des cahiers, telle une adolescente énamourée ; fan de sa personne, elle collait tout ce qui la concernait.

Quant à sa conversation, elle ne résistait pas à deux ou trois repas. Wim savait maintenant ce qu'elle acceptait qu'on sût d'elle; pour le reste, elle ne vivait de rien et ne s'intéressait à rien. Lui si disert, si volubile, avait parfois l'impression de ne s'adresser qu'au silence, tant elle ne l'écoutait pas.

Eric-Emmanuel Schmitt, Les perroquets de la place d'Arezzo, Paris, Albin Michel, 2013

Version

April 2010

5

10

10

15

The funeral was over. The reception was starting to fizzle out. Benjamin decided it was time to go.

'Dad?' he said. 'I think I'm going to make a move'.

5 'Good', said Colin. 'I'll come with you.'

They headed for the door and managed to escape without saying any goodbyes. The village street was deserted, silent in the late sunshine.

'We shouldn't really just leave like this,' said Benjamin, glancing back towards the pub doubtfully.

'Why not? I've spoken to everyone I want to. Come on, take me to the car.'

Benjamin allowed his father to hold him by the arm in a faltering grip. He was steadier on his feet that way. With indescribable slowness, they began to shuffle along the street towards the pub car park.

'I don't want to go home,' said Colin. 'I can't face it, without her. Take me to your place.'

'Sure,' said Benjamin, even as his heart plummeted. The vision he had been promising himself – solitude, meditation, a cold glass of cider at the old wrought-iron table, the murmur of the river as it rippled by on its timeless course – disappeared, spiralled away into the afternoon sky.

Jonathan Coe, Middle England, London, Viking Press, 2018